

#flo #hw

1 | the past and future of american civil rights!

so, just not the present? present kinda seems important tho ngl civil rights in the US is one step forwards one step back want's to talk about what the agenda for civil rights is in the age of Obama — so this is written relatively recently, but pre trump old framers tried to make it incredibly hard to eliminate slavery constitutionally, so they gave disproportionate power to a small num of states w/ - appointed senate - electoral college - three-fifths apportionment - req for supermajorities and etc. to amend constitution canada deal meant that the non-slave states of the north could outnumber the south, coming close to the needed supermajorities ofc, south didn't want to let this happen dred scott case meant that north would have to achieve supermajority if they wanted change

"Likewise, because selective colleges and professional schools recruited heavily through legacy admissions and well-established institutional pipelines, the only realistic way to desegregate higher education was to require admissions officials to expand their applicant pools."

...