

1 | Models of History

1.1 | Watson

Watson's Model: scale from...

Independence
Independence States (no control)	Hegemony (some external control)	Dominion (some external, some internal control)

See KBhHIST201Watson Watson's Model of States

1.2 | Arrigi

- When people talk about Hegemony, they often mean dominance

In order to achieve hegemony/dominion in a system, a state must transform how a history operates

A spectrum of governance with two extremes...

1.2.1 | "Territorialist Model"

- Success measured with territory + control
- Wealth and economy as byproduct

1.2.2 | "Capitalist Model"

- Success measured with the control over resources and trade
- Territorial acquisition as byproduct

Arrigi claims that there are two main modes of power: the Capitalist — controlling trade and resources — and the territorialist — controlling land and people.

To reach world hegemony (become the world leader) — change the world order. For instance, Tang China turned the world from no model to a Territorialist model; US turned the world from a Territorialist model to a Capitalist model.

1.2.3 | Coercion vs Consent

- Means of power acquisition
- Either...
 - Coercion — force joining of a system via force (trade war, actual war)
 - Consent — use deals and negotiations to ask to join system

1.3 | Social Contract Theory

The state arises from the cumulative experience of a populations' self-government as it grows and requires more and more attention

1.4 | Predatory Theory

"War makes states, and states make war" - Charles Tilly

1.4.1 | Functions of a State

1. War Making: The act of eliminating rivals or potential external threats outside of its own territories.
2. State Making: The act of eliminating internal rival forces and insurgents from within its own territories.
3. Protection: The act of eliminating potential threats to its population.
4. Extraction: The act of securing the means to execute the previous three activities, such as the collection of taxes or revenue.

#flo #disorganized

Merchantilist Empires => Merchants => Trade

- Portugal and Spain focused on land acquisition
 - King and queen doing conquering
 - Little privatization and more of a territorialist model
- Dutch, French, and British empires focused more on actual trading
 - Companies with charters
 - * But! Has own army
 - * Coinage
 - * and Court
 - * (all vested on the authority of the government)
 - Mostly private investors and a capitalist model