1 | Nice way to start the mornin

slides

1.0.1 | skimming strat!

everyone should have one isn't expecting to read every page, esp in college experiment with skimming no need to mem every page etc.

tom does rec and outlines sections / types of argument

try automating?

1.0.2 | questions

1. What is "The Myth" of US history that Dunbar-Ortiz seeks to challenge?
2. Why does the history of indigenous peoples not fit into the framework of multiculturalism?
3. How does Dunbar-Ortiz's approach to the history of the United States compare with Hannah-Jones?
4. What is the difference between an "origin narrative" and a history of the founding of the United States?

1. hannah-jones still has american exceptionalism, dunbar says it's all bad?

(a) multiculturalism -> mixed salad, distinct

i. dunbar argues that natives got assimilated

ii. hannah jones argues that natives drove that which makes america exceptional every author has a "project," an agenda

the history of american bends towards freedom - ~obama no, it's cuz of brutal fighting, argues dunbar and friends

we've kind of been looking at things from the perspective of the left a little bit

"america, love it or leave it"

1.0.3 | A better anti-racism, article by Coleman Hughes

- types on anti-racism
  - MLK
    - * race is an insignificant attribute
  - race-consciousness
    - * oppressed groups need more recognition, respect, resources
      - not about racial harmony
